Overview

" (Civil and Administrative Procedures in Light of Jurists' Opinions and Judicial Rulings) is a comprehensive legal treatise that delves into the intricate world of civil and administrative procedural law. The book distinguishes itself by offering a dual perspective, meticulously analyzing contemporary legal procedures through the lens of both established Islamic jurisprudence (Fiqh) and modern judicial precedents. It aims to bridge the gap between traditional legal thought and the evolving landscape of contemporary legal practice, providing a holistic understanding for legal professionals, scholars, and students.

The core argument of the book revolves around the idea that modern procedural law, while often codified and secular in appearance, frequently echoes principles found within classical Islamic legal theory. By examining the historical roots and jurisprudential underpinnings of various procedural rules, the author illuminates the rationale behind current legal frameworks and offers insights into their interpretation and application. The book systematically covers key aspects of litigation, from the initiation of a lawsuit to the execution of judgments, including jurisdiction, evidence, appeals, and specific considerations for administrative disputes. It matters because it provides a critical resource for understanding the foundational principles guiding legal processes in many jurisdictions influenced by both civil law traditions and Islamic legal heritage, fostering a deeper appreciation for the interplay of these legal systems.
